The Century for February, it is stated in

"Atlanta Cotton Exposition." After the war one of them moved with the family slaves on to a rich Mississippi valley plantation, and succeeded in placing both himself and and succeeded in placing both himself and his freed laborers in a position of prosperity. He details the difficulties under which Southern planters, like himself, have labored, and he expresses unbounded confidence in the ability of the freedmen to support themselves in comfort. One of the grandsons, in referring to the elider Calhoun's belief that the two races could not exist on the same soil except in the relations of masters and slaves, made this supprising remark. "If my grandfather and his succeites had known as much about the negro as I know, and could have had the same faith in his capacity for progress which I have attained from my own experience, there would have been neither slavery nor war."

For Refusing to Bring His Child into Court when Ordered to De So.

The case of Brown a legal fight between husband and wife for the possession of the child, has come to an interesting pause in the Chancery Court. Some time ago Brown took possession of the child and refused to give it up. The wife sued out a writ of habeat corpus for the child, and Chancellor McDowell ordered the husband to bring the little one into court yesterday. When the time for trying the question arrived Brown appeared alone, and stated to the Court that he had sent the child to Arkansas. The chancellor ordered him to be taken to jail for contempt of court. Brown

A PLEASANT TALK liss Willard, Yesterday, to the Popils of Miss Conway's School. By invitation of the principal, Miss Wil-lard, yesterday, made a little impromptu address to the children and young ladies of Miss Conway's school, and the impress left on those young minds by her simple, earnest words is, perhaps, not the least of her good works among us. The students were reminded of the triple make-up of every human being— a brain to think, a heart to feel, and hands to do good, had or indifferent work; of the fact that among the inventions of man was fact that among the inventions of man was one that took away the good gifts of God, the grains and fruits, and by pounding and bruis-ing and squrexing, extracted thence a harm-ful easence (alcohol), which, taken into the ful easence (alcohol), which, taken into the human system, pounces upon the brain like a thirsty tiger, and wrenches and distorts the whole nature of the man. The marred brain is no longer able to think clearly; the heart is dried up, and what a crocked lump of unthinking rage is the once kind hand of a drunken father—no longer a hand, but a cruel fist! She repeated the story of a temperance worker addressing a school, who appealed to a class of little boys for an answer to the question: "What is it to get aswer to the question: "What is it to get runk?" One bright little fellow held up was a wise mother's riddle to her own young children as they looked in pitying sympathy at the grief of a bereaved little one left for a few days in their home. She told them they had just one gift, spelled with four letters, that would surely comfort the sobbing little stranger, and then the eager children ran—one to bring his wonderful k-i-t-e, another her choicest Christmas gift, a beautiful m-u-f-f, and a third her new d-o-l-i; but the sobbing little one saw nothing, heard nothing, till the youngest, the pet of the household came and putting her chubby arms about the stranger child's neck, and laying her rosy cheek against the tearstained face, faltered out in accents of loving sympathy: "Oh, don't cry so! I haven't any kite, or muff, or doll to bring you, but I'm so sorry you feel bad, and I love you." Then the sobs ceased, the downcast eyes looked up, the gentle caress was returned and sunshine broke out all over the tearful face. It was love she wanted. Miss Willard closed R. It was love she wanted. Miss Willard clo her ten minutes talk by giving these yo learners an epigrammatic lesson, which it was delightful to hear the chorus of young voices repeating after her: "Look up, not down; look out, not in; look forward, not behind; and do all the good you can."
